When Brian was a junior in high school I had him in a marketing class. He was very bright and full of fun and laughter. We had some private, serious discussions at times, but most of the time we joked and kidded each other. He was a very good student and strived to do well in class. Brian was easy to like and I talked to my wife about him, because she too had him in class. We both held Brian in high regard. As the years passed, I would sometime see Brian in his car at Albertson's. He would always call me over, and we would have a brief conversation. Brian knew I liked him and even though years had passed, I still felt the same way. I noticed his health appeared to be failing, and I always hoped I could maybe make his day a little brighter by sharing a few kind words. Brian's passing is a sad thing for both my wife and myself. Our condolences to the entire Weigum family. We share in their loss.
